Suisman Urban Design is developing the master plan for the re-use of the former cathedral of Los Angeles, Saint Vibiana Church. The property is now owned by Tom Gilmore of Gilmore Associates, and is being planned as a unique urban complex which will include a new performing arts center for California State University in the church building itself. Additional uses are expected to include some 300 units of new loft-style housing, the Little Tokyo branch library, a boutique hotel and restaurant, underground parking, and a public garden and amphitheater.
